Consultancies

The Queensland Government defines a consultant as an individual or an organisation if all of the following apply:

- provides expert knowledge to analyse information, draw conclusions and make recommendations in the form of a written report or an intellectual product for future action, which the agency must then decide upon or take a certain course of action
- the nature of the output is not necessarily predictable, but tends to be open ended and is more complex (for example, a range of recommendations which the agency must consider)
- develops a new concept or process and where the agency requires critical judgement to consider the recommended course of action
- is engaged for a fixed period of time at an agreed payment rate
- work is not directly supervised by the agency.
