Procedures to follow when making an application under s26 Legal Profession Act 2007

1. Introduction

1.1 Either a law practice or a disqualified/convicted person, or both, may apply to the Society under s26(2) of the Legal Profession Act 2007 (Qld) (the Act) for approval of the disqualified/convicted person to be a lay associate of a law practice. An application should only be made upon an offer of employment.

2. Legislative Framework

2.1 An application can be made under s26(2) of the Act for approval of the disqualified/convicted person to be a lay associate of a law practice.

2.2 Section 26 applies only to lay associates of law practices. A law practice is:

i. an Australian legal practitioner who is a sole practitioner; or
ii. a law firm; or
iii. an incorporated legal practice; or
iv. a multi-disciplinary partnership.

2.3 A disqualified/convicted person cannot seek to become a lay associate unless the person has informed the practice of the disqualification or conviction s26(5) the Act.

2.4 When an application is received under s26(4) of the Act the law society must if it refuses an application or accepts the position but imposes conditions provide the applicant(s) with a notice outlining the refusal or conditions.

3. Application Process

3.1 The onus of satisfying the Council that the application should be granted rests with the applicant(s). Whether the Council grants its approval is entirely decided on a case by case basis according to the facts and circumstances of the application.

3.2 The applicant(s) remains responsible for providing information relevant to the application and should communicate with the Society in a candid and frank manner. This includes disclosing all relevant information, whether supportive or unsupportive, within the applicant’s(s’) knowledge or possession.

3.3 The Council should take into account these matters in consideration of an application which are drawn from Camille Eduoard Dezarnaulds and Stephen Wawn v The Law Society of New South Wales (Unreported Supreme Court 27 June 1995) as discussed in La Fontaine v Law Society of New South Wales [2006] NSWADT 244:
a. The discretion is entirely general. No attempt has been made to circumscribe it by reference to particular matters, or to impose any particular threshold test which must be satisfied;

b. There are no time limits. Theoretically, the practitioner who was struck off could apply the next day to become an associate of a legal firm;

c. Those guilty of an indictable offence, or who have been guilty of the most extreme offences against the proper conduct of their profession and have been disqualified for such reasons, are equally able to make application to become an associate;

d. [not relevant in Qld]

e. There are obvious public interests which are to be served, and which must be taken account of. These interests include:

   i. The protection of the public;

   ii. The standing of the legal profession and the standards that are required of it;

   iii. Affording those who are disqualified, or have been found guilty of indictable offences the chance of rehabilitation and getting paid work in the profession.

f. While the standing of the profession in the public eye is of great importance, and the need to maintain the integrity of the profession is of equal importance, it is necessary to bear in mind that an associate is not a legal practitioner. One does not, as it were, translate the requirements demanded of practising members of the profession, or of those who are applying for admission to the profession, to those who are applying to become associates. This is perfectly plain as the statute is dealing with situations where a person has been disqualified from legal practice, or may never had been qualified but would otherwise be debarred from acting as an associate because of conviction for an indictable offence.

3.4. Approvals are usually conditional upon both the law practice and the disqualified/convicted person giving undertakings to the Society encapsulating appropriate measures, tailored to the particular circumstances of the case, to ensure the maintenance of professional standards, the protection of the public and appropriate supervision and management. By way of illustration only, both the law practice and the disqualified/convicted person can reasonably anticipate that undertakings concerning the following issues will be sought:

- How the disqualified/convicted person will be described in all of the law practice’s material, letters, costs agreements, advertising and communications with all other parties.

- Limitations on the disqualified/convicted person handling trust property.

- Limitations on the disqualified/convicted person being in charge of an office or other professionals.
Policy Position

- Limitations on the signing of correspondence by the disqualified/convicted person.
- Supervision and management arrangements concerning the performance of work by the disqualified/convicted person.
